

(NASHVILLE) — State Representative Kelly Keisling (R-Byrdstown) released an easy-to-understand guide this week to help clarify the four constitutional amendments that will appear on this year's ballot in November.

"We have had many folks across the district reach out to our office regarding these four amendments," said Keisling. "Because of this, we have put together the following guide that will briefly tell you what voting YES will do and what voting NO will do so that you can make your own informed decisions on these important issues."

Amendment One:

If you vote NO on amendment one, you are saying that you think there should be fewer restrictions on abortions and that abortion clinics do not need to be licensed or inspected. In addition, you believe late term (partial birth) abortions need fewer restrictions.

If you vote YES on amendment one, you are saying that there should be some regulations on abortion such as, licensure requirements for abortion facilities and stopping late term (partial birth) abortions.

Amendment Two:

If you vote NO, on amendment two, you are saying that the people of Tennessee should be able to vote and choose the Tennessee Supreme Court Justices.

If you vote YES on amendment two you are saying that the Governor should have the right to appoint the Tennessee Supreme Court Justices along with the Legislature approving of these choices.

Amendment Three:

If you vote NO, on amendment three, you are saying that you believe Tennessee needs to eventually get a State Income tax.

If you vote YES, on amendment three, you are saying that Tennessee should never have a State Income Tax.

Amendment Four:

If you vote NO, you do not believe that Veterans Organizations should be able to have charitable gaming events to raise money for helping our local vets.

If you vote YES, you do believe that Veterans Organizations should be able to have a charitable gaming events so that they could better assist our local veterans.
